

Good morning,

I hope you're having a good week! I am nearly finished with coding the homepage design for OCP, and I wanted to ask a question before I finish and send it over.

I have noticed that in the navigation bar, next to the search box, the mockup does not feature a submit button for the search box. For many people, using the enter key is intuitive, but some may have trouble using the website with that being the only option to submit your search query. Providing a submit button makes your website more accessible to disabled people (example: those using a reader of some kind to navigate the website if they're vision impaired), and some less tech-savvy folks may not be accustomed to using the enter key rather than clicking a button.

It's totally up to you, adding a submit button is an easy fix that would likely help out some website visitors but I wanted to check before making any changes to your designer's mockup.

Best,

Hayley Hartman

CodeRed | Front-end Web Developer